“Thank you for demonstrating an interest in joining me as I spin the wheel of fortune which for so long controlled the fate of County Durham’s numerous communities. The book does not claim to be an immensely detailed exploration of the ins and outs or ups and downs of the Durham Coalfield’s long and illustrious history – it is instead my tribute to the industry which dominates the fabric of family memories, traditions and hearts the county over. The book gives an insight into life, work and play for such communities – providing an intriguing introduction to local history for history enthusiasts and residents alike. I have endeavoured to stir memories for those old enough to remember the dying dies of the industry, whilst also introducing those younger people who have simply grown up alongside these traditions and memories. The book is enriched with contributions from a wide spectrum of people whom the industry has touched in a number of ways: from retired miners to the people who strive to regenerate former mining communities today. Every copy purchased makes a contribution to the Coal Industry Social Welfare Organisation which strives to improve opportunities for retired miners and their descendants alike. I invite you to join me in my examination, intrigue, sheer underestimation and eventual true admiration.”
